430 WERE DROWNED

LONDON, June 23.—A most terrible calamity has befallen the British battleship Victoria, the flagship of the Mediterranean squadron, and hundreds of lives have been lost.

The Victoria, which flew
the flag of Vice Admiral Sir Geo. Tyron, K.C.B., was run into off Tripoli by the British battleship Camperdown, also belonging to the Mediterranean squadron, and under the command of Captain Chas. Johnstone.

The Victoria had an enormous hole made in her side through which the water poured in torrents.

The immense hull of the Victoria at once began to settle before those on board her could cast loose the small boats. She went to the bottom, carrying down with her nearly all on board. Some of the officers and crew managed to get out of the suction caused by the sinking vessel and were rescued. Among those lost is Vice-Admiral Tyron.

The first reports of the disaster stated that about 200 men had been drowned, but later dispatches show that the loss of life was far greater, not less than 400 of the officers and crew of the Victoria having gone down with their ship.

The complement of officers and crew of the Victoria comprised six hundred men.
It is now estimated that the total number of lives lost is 500.

The first despatches concerning the accident led to the belief that the disaster had occurred off the coast of Tripoli in North Africa. Later advices show that the scene of the calamity was near Tripoli, a port town on Eastern Mediterranean, fifty miles northeast of Diyarbakir, Syria, and comparatively short distance from island of Cyprus.

All official telegrams regarding the loss of the ship will be sent at once to the Queen at Windsor Castle. As soon as Her Majesty received Rear Admiral Markham's dispatch, which was immediately forwarded to her, she gave orders for the prospereity of the state that the accident had occurred off the coast of Tripoli in North Africa. Later advices show that the scene of the calamity

The prime minister informed the House of Commons of the accident and paid the most glowing tribute to the worth of Vice-Admiral Tyron, who he said was one of the oldest and most esteemed officers of the service of Her Majesty. Mr. Gladstone said that there were 611 officers and seamen and boys and 107 women on board the ship. It was feared of this total of 713 souls 430 had been lost. He was sure that the loss of life had attended the foundering of the vessel. The prime minister and the members of the House of Commons and the public throughout the country expressed their sympathy with the families of the deceased and hoped that the survivors would be comforted in their affliction.

An Incomplete Story.

Mrs. Gazzam—Is there anything in the paper, dear?

Gazzam—I see that Fossick wants a divorce.

Mrs. Gazzam—From his wife?

Gazzam—The paper doesn't say.

MATT

on me round you did he? Then why doesn't he keep you? He do, only I live along o' William Jones.

Again Brinkley began whistling lightly and working away vigorously with his brush. Presently the conversation began again.

Matt, what things did you come across?"

"I have never heard whether any thing was found with you which might lead to your finding your relations?"

"No more has William Jones."

"Well, since he found you, I suppose he ought to know; and since you have no relations, Matt, and no claim upon anybody in the world, it was very kind of Mr. Monk to keep you instead of sending you to the workhouse as he might have done."

On this point Matt seemed rather sheepish.

"Well," continued Brinkley, as he went on lightly touching his work, "perhaps I have done my equestrian friend a wrong. Perhaps his unamiable exterior has in real nature, perhaps he is good and kind, generous to the poor, willing to help the helpless—like you, for instance."

"I him?" exclaimed Matt; "Monk, of Monkshurst! Why, he don't give nothing to nobody. No fear."

And yet, according to your own showing, he has helped to support you all these years—you who have no claim whatever upon him."

This was an enigma to which Matt had no solution. She said no more, but Brinkley, while he continued painting, silently ruminated thus:

"It strikes me this puzzle would be worth unravelling, if I could only find the key. If I but knew how to use her!"

Perhaps she is amiable. I've seen William Jones come about here, I have, but I never could track him."

"Whew!" said Brinkley when they were fairly clear of the cabin; "the open air is better than that den; but then William Jones is very poor, isn't he, Matt?"

"He says he is."

"But don't you believe it?"

"Praps I do, and praps I don't; it don't matter to you, does it?"

"Not the least in the world."

They went on for a while in silence; then Matt, who had been furiously watching his face all the while, spoke again:

"You ain't angry, are you, master?"

"No."

"All right—Good-by."

By the light of the flickering rush-light Brinkley now looked about him. At a glance he noted some of the details of the queer little room; then his eye fell upon the occupants, whom from Mr. Monk's description he recognized as William Jones and the grizzly author of his being.

The old man, who, Brinkley perceived, admitted, certainly bore some resemblance to the Rembrandt head which Matt had recognized, sat dozing fitfully at the hearth, while his son was busily employed in mending an old lantern.

Upon the entrance of Brinkley the lantern was quickly thrown aside, and William Jones, assuming a most obscure manner, hastened to give a welcome to the stranger. Brinkley was amused. He accepted William Jones's offer of a seat, then he lit up his briar-root pipe, and, while smoking lazily, put a few questions to his host. But it was not until the gain of information of any kind was soon undeceived. William Jones was no fool. Combined with excessive avarice, he possessed all the cunning of the fox, and the moment he saw that the stranger was pumping him he was on his guard.

Presently, however, his curiosity gained the day. Categorically, in his turn, he began to question Brinkley about his doings.

"I suppose now, master," said he, "you travel about a deal in that country?"

Brinkley explained that the "cart" in question had been in his possession only a few months.

"But I travelled a good deal before I got it," he explained. "This time last year I was in Ireland."

"In Ireland, master?"

"Yes, on the west coast; do you know where?"

William Jones shook his head.

"There be plenty wreck there, ain't there?" said he suddenly.

"Wreck?" repeated Brinkley.

"Yes, I've heard tell o' wonderful storms and big ships breaking up. Look ye now, they do tell wonderful tales; and I wonder sometimes if all they say be true."

Brinkley looked at his host for a minute or so in silent wonder, for the little man was transformed. Instead of gazing about him with the stupid expression which up till now his face had worn, his face expressed all the keenness of a fox-hound; and, while smoking lazily, he now sat staring wildly before him, evidently imagining he was standing on a highland, gazing out to sea.

"Wreck?" he murmured. "Ay, there be driftin' in wi' the wind and the tide, William—driftin' in wi' the tide."

"Shut up, old man!" said William, giving his father a nudge; then turning again to Brinkley, he said: "Be them tales true, master?"

"Eh? Oh, yes; perfectly true," said Brinkley, being in a lively humor, and determined to give his host a treat.

The expression in the eyes of William Jones became even more greedy.

"Praps," he said, "you've seen some of them wrecks?"

"Dear me, yes," answered Brinkley, determined to give the reins to his imagination. "I've seen any number of them wrecks."

"A what?" exclaimed Brinkley.

"A wreck," continued Matt, as if speaking the most natural occupation in the world. Brinkley looked at her, imagining that she must be practising some wild joke. He had certainly believed that they were a species of humanitarians, but he had always believed that they had belonged to past centuries, and were now as quaint as a manuscript. But the girl evidently meant what she said, and thought there was nothing extraordinary in the statement.

"That we don't look ugly, do it?" she continued, pointing at the ocean. "But it is, these rocks out there, where the ships split on; then they go all to pieces, and the things come ashore."

"And what becomes of all the things, Matt?"

"Some of 'em's stole, and some of 'em's took by the coast guards. They do say," she added, mysteriously, "as there's lots o' things—gold and silver—hid among them sand hills. Before the coast guards come all the folks were wreckers, like William Jones, and they used to hide it in the sand hills."

"Indeed. Then, in that is the case, why don't they take the treasure up and turn it into money?"

"Why? 'Cause them sand hills is alwas changing and shifting about, they are; though they know well enough the things is there, there's no findin' 'em." "I always thought William Jones was poor."

"So he is, he says!" replied Matt, "cause though he be allus foraging, he don't find much now on account of those coast-guard chaps."

After they had rested themselves they walked a little further up the cliff, then they followed a narrow winding path which brought them to the shore below. Here Matt, who seemed to be pretty well grounded in the history of the place, pointed him out the wonders of the creation. He had been forewarned, as a wrecker's haunts and treasure-stores, which were now washed by the sea, and covered with slimy weeds; then she brought him to the promontory where they told her she herself had been found. This spot Brinkley examined curiously, then he looked at the girl.

"I suppose you had clothes on when you came ashore, didn't you, Matt?"

"Why, of course I had. William Jones has got 'em!"

"Has he? Where?"

"In his cave. I expect."

"His cave! Where is that?" asked Brinkley, becoming very much interested.

"Good-by," said Brinkley. But in a trice Matt was beside him.

"I'm going to show you the way," she explained as she went out with him into the darkness.

"Whew!" said Brinkley when they were fairly clear of the cabin; "the open air is better than that den; but then William Jones is very poor, isn't he, Matt?"

"He says he is."

"But don't you believe it?"

"Praps I do, and praps I don't; it don't matter to you, does it?"

"Not the least in the world."

They went on for a while in silence; then Matt, who had been furiously watching his face all the while, spoke again:

"You ain't angry, are you, master?"

"No."

"All right—Good-by."

She gave a bound, like a young deer, and prepared to start for a swift run back, but the young man called her.

"Matt, come here!"

She came up to him. He put his arm about her shoulders, bent over her upturned face, and kissed her. In her impatience she had dropped her blouse.

"You don't want me to go any further, do you?"

"No."

THAT CONVENTION.

The Grits of Canada have convened and are themselves, if we are to believe their outward show fairly satisfied with the results. As however the new policy on substantial matters cannot be seen with the strongest glass, the result in the country is very problematic. They say they are in favor of more rigid economy in the management of public affairs, such for instance, as letting the speaker of the House, as was the case in Anglin's palmy days contrary to the Independence of Parliament take printing contracts and farm them out at a great reduction, pocketing a huge slice of public cash; or again after the manner of the Greenway-White printing business now going on at Chicago. They are in favor of a better franchise act—one we presume like that of Greenway, that will let partisans stuff the list with bogus names and deprive their opponents of legal machinery to knock them off, with a feature to justify friends in stuffing ballot boxes as was the case with Lafleur in Jacques Cartier years ago and Smart in Brandon.

The public expected to hear some expression on the Manitoba school act but there was none. There was present that camouflaged "liberal", Mr. Prendergast in an excellent position to ask the Liberal party of Canada what they thought of the Greenway school act, but the question was never mooted. They declare the Thompson Government dilatory in dealing with it, but they have no solution of the question themselves. If they can use it to embarrass the Government that is all they want, and tricks like this they hold before the country as statesmanship. On the trade question they say they are in favor of such a measure of free trade as will allow a revenue to meet the requirements of the country, but do they mean it? In 1875, when in office, they raised the tariff from 15 to 17½ per cent. After being ousted in 1878 they declared for absolute free trade, next commercial union next again unrestricted reciprocity and now a revenue tariff only. Now what is to be thought of a party that shysters with the most important question before the people of Canada in this way. If in 1875 a 17½ per cent tariff was the thing why not repeat it now, or if again in their turn unrestricted reciprocity and commercial union were the policies to elevate the Canadian people why desert them now for a revenue tariff? That is what the electors would like to understand. Taking the Grit history into account we have no assurance they will not make a dozen or more shuffles on this same issue before polling day comes around. A policy shifting as the sands on the sea shore may be good enough for a hawker or a peddler, but it will hardly serve for the proper government of Canada.

POLITICAL PURITY.

How lustily some roosters crow on their own dung hill. Hear the Hon. Mr. Laurier at the convention at Ottawa: "I tell you this if you want to purify the political atmosphere of this country, you must revert to this principle that not a cent is to be levied except what is necessary to carry on the legitimate expenses of the government economically administered."

The principle he lays down is a sound one, and it is a pity that both political parties do not observe it—but neither does. It is safe to say that if the present government tariff met but the actual needs of the country, the public past few years would not have heard the changes that have been made so frequently on the Caron, Langelin, and other similar charges. But let us see wherein the sincerity of Mr. Laurier rests. In 1873 the Honorable Alexander Mackenzie, a man that even every Grit will acknowledge was as capable and as honest a man as ever Mr. Laurier was, declared in his general election his party would "elevate the standard of public morality" as to capture admiration, and a few months later the courts disclosed in the case of his friends in protest trials, the most glaring instance of public debauchery ever heard of in any country, as high as $50,000 spent by some of them in some constituencies to carry them. But we need not go back so far. It is only three or four years ago since the Federal government gave the province of Quebec a large slice of public money to assist in the construction of a railway. Instead however of using the money for the object for which it was given, Mr. Laurier's bosom friend, took it with Laurier's knowledge to debauch the electors of the province in Mr. Laurier's interests. It was fully understood as a return for this favor, if Laurier carried the country, Quebec was to receive annually a larger subsidy from the Federal Government, which would have necessitated increased customs taxation. Liberal free trade to the contrary notwithstanding. Political purity may be a very nice thing but it becomes men, besmirched as this same Laurier is, to talk about it, as he does. For the public benefit it would be well if it could be enforced, but no one need expect that Mr. Laurier and friends have a monopoly of it.

THE TRIBUNE AND COMPETITION

It is surprising to many how intelligent men read and patronise newspapers conducted on the principles that underlie the utterances of the Winnipeg Tribune. Read the following, for instance from its last Friday's issue:

We have more than once expressed our conviction that while the two great needs of the western country are tariff reform and freight rates, we need not look to the Conservatives for an ally in obtaining either.

We readily grant that the government at Ottawa has done but little in influencing the C. P. R. in the way of reductions, and from the good reason there is but little they can do. When they let the contract for the road schedules of rates the company could not exceed on the basis of the earnings was assigned to, and as the latter have kept within that to the present the government is powerless to enforce lower rates now. The inference from the Tribune's article is that it is the Grit party and especially Greenway & Co. that are giving the people competition.

Well if we have competition it ought to be seen somewhere. If we had it surely the Tribune would not itself be crying out for it, and imploring J. J. Hill of the St. Paul's line to build another road to Winnipeg to give it. Like Janus of old the Tribune could not live without two faces, one to turn to the electors and declare we have competition, and the other to turn to itself when putting its hand into its pocket to pay freight bills. Of course Greenway had a grand opportunity to see competition when letting the N. P. contract, but was so overcome by the "$800 a mile" that he lost sight of it. Still the Tribune has not a word of condemnation for his traitorous conduct, but a censure for Conservatives who were not in power in the province at any time there was a chance of settling competition from any quarter. We really have pity for those of the public who are gullied by the logic of the Winnipeg Tribune.

DECEIVED BY THE HON. CLIFFORD

At the Methodist conference here when the treatment by the Greenway government of the plebiscit, came up for consideration, the Hon. Mr. Sifton defended himself as follows:

"I feel myself in a delicate position, being the father of the attorney general. It had been acknowledged by the committee that there had been deception. He knew for a fact that not only some members of the legislature, but also some ministers of the crown had consciously believed that the House had the power to pass prohibition."

What better evidence than this do the electors of Manitoba want of the utter unreliability of the present Greenway government. When they sought the votes of the people a year ago the candidates and supporters one and all said give us your support and if returned again we will, through provincial legislation give you total prohibition, and when the polling is over instead of granting it, the Hon. Clifford says "if you want it, go to Ottawa and get it, we can give it you." In dealing with this exception the Hon. J. W. Sifton says he feels himself in a delicate position being the father of the Attorney General who so grossly betrayed the electors. If the father has come to the conclusion that the son is a fraud and a deceiver of the electors, how can the great mass of electors come to any other conclusion. That is a question for the electors.

As some of the Grit papers, notably the Winnipeg Tribune, are accusing Mr. Boyd, M. P. of treachery in connection with the binding twine question, it is well the public should know the naked facts. From public correspondence, it is clear that gentleman had arranged with the C. P. R. to retail it to the public at all their stations through their agents at wholesale cost with freight added, provided the arrangement did not tramp too heavily on the feet of others. When the Massey-Harris Co. learned this they put the pistol to the head of the railway and said, if you do this we will do all our shipping through another railroad. Of course it was natural to believe the company could not afford to lose that trade and the arrangement with Mr. Boyd fell through. From a business point of view neither the Massey-Harris Co., nor the C. P. R. can be specially blamed for the failure of Mr. Boyd's arrangements, as both did what any wise awake business firms would do under the circumstances but all the same Mr. Boyd did as he promised to do and all honorable men will give him credit for it, prints like the Tribune to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE NORTHERN PACIFIC CUT TO THE COAST.

On and after June 25th the N. P. will sell tickets to the Pacific coast points at $25, 1st class, and $15, 2d class.

Hill of the St. Paul's line to build another road to Winnipeg to give it. Like Janus of old the Tribune could not live without two faces, one to turn to the electors and declare we have competition, and the other to turn to itself when putting its hand into its pocket to pay freight bills. Of course Greenway had a grand opportunity to see competition when letting the N. P. contract, but was so overcome by the "$800 a mile" that he lost sight of it. Still the Tribune has not a word of condemnation for his traitorous conduct, but a censure for Conservatives who were not in power in the province at any time there was a chance of settling competition from any quarter. We really have pity for those of the public who are gullied by the logic of the Winnipeg Tribune.

The public expected to hear some expression on the Manitoba school act but there was none. There was present that camouflaged "liberal", Mr. Prendergast in an excellent position to ask the Liberal party of Canada what they thought of the Greenway school act, but the question was never mooted. They declare the Thompson Government dilatory in dealing with it, but they have no solution of the question themselves. If they can use it to embarrass the Government that is all they want, and tricks like this they hold before the country as statesmanship. On the trade question they say they are in favor of such a measure of free trade as will allow a revenue to meet the requirements of the country, but do they mean it? In 1875, when in office, they raised the tariff from 15 to 17½ per cent. After being ousted in 1878 they declared for absolute free trade, next commercial union next again unrestricted reciprocity and now a revenue tariff only. Now what is to be thought of a party that shysters with the most important question before the people of Canada in this way. If in 1875 a 17½ per cent tariff was the thing why not repeat it now, or if again in their turn unrestricted reciprocity and commercial union were the policies to elevate the Canadian people why desert them now for a revenue tariff? That is what the electors would like to understand. Taking the Grit history into account we have no assurance they will not make a dozen or more shuffles on this same issue before polling day comes around. A policy shifting as the sands on the sea shore may be good enough for a hawker or a peddler, but it will hardly serve for the proper government of Canada.

Political purity may be a very nice thing but it becomes men, besmirched as this same Laurier is, to talk about it, as he does. For the public benefit it would be well if it could be enforced, but no one need expect that Mr. Laurier and friends have a monopoly of it.

THE TRIBUNE AND COMPETITION

It is surprising to many how intelligent men read and patronise newspapers conducted on the principles that underlie the utterances of the Winnipeg Tribune. Read the following, for instance from its last Friday's issue:

We have more than once expressed our conviction that while the two great needs of the western country are tariff reform and freight rates, we need not look to the Conservatives for an ally in obtaining either.

We readily grant that the government at Ottawa has done but little in influencing the C. P. R. in the way of reductions, and from the good reason there is but little they can do. When they let the contract for the road schedules of rates the company could not exceed on the basis of the earnings was assigned to, and as the latter have kept within that to the present the government is powerless to enforce lower rates now. The inference from the Tribune's article is that it is the Grit party and especially Greenway & Co. that are giving the people competition.

Well if we have competition it ought to be seen somewhere. If we had it surely the Tribune would not itself be crying out for it, and imploring J. J. Hill of the St. Paul's line to build another road to Winnipeg to give it. COMMUNICATION.

DEBT.

The Editor of The Brandon Mail, some years ago in South Simcoe, Ont., formed a society which was called the "Taxpayers' Protection Society," the object of which was to restrain the County Council from spending the people's money extravagantly, which it was considered they had been and were still doing. Our society had not been established many weeks before similar societies were all around us.

I apprehend that such a society Brandon would not be out of place, if it is not too late. Any stranger going into Brandon would be sure to notice somewhere about the Brandon hills we had a gold mine of extreme richness, seeing we can throw away much dirt, in building useless, to a great extent, market houses, undertakings, water works, etc., which would pay very well, could the city afford it, and it cannot. The first thing the "Taxpayers' Protection Society" should engage into, will be the proposed park which would be very desirable. They might as well purchase it at a much less price. Nothing wrong about it, but it shows that it may pay when people who have no objection are rich at the rate paid per acre.

Yours,

T. SCOTT.

CIVIC HOLIDAY.

The following question has been sent to the Mayor and he is acting on it. We the undersigned citizens taking into consideration the Monster Union one of all the societies to be held on Thursday August 8th; also the fact that more than 2000 members of the different societies are expected to attend from all over the main and branch lines of the city, and the gratifying knowledge that the large expenditure ensuing will be to our own people, ask your worship to proclaim Tuesday, Aug. 8th, a civic day.

WESTERN WORLD.

MANITOBA MATTERS—NORTHWEST NUGGETS—COLUMBIA CRUMBS.

Collected Carefully—Given Graciously.

CASLEAVERY.

Tenders were let for the building of a new for a ferry at Anderson Bros., over the Assiniboine river.

The flooding of the valley has driven the moles out of their holes and hundreds have been killed on the hillside.

Mr. Alex. Stewart, the reeve, has bought Mr. Venning's house in Shellmouth where he intends to reside.

The cattle are beginning to pick up after the long winter. Mr. Venning drove his herd down to Shellmouth for his sale on the 14th where his sale took place.

MILLWOOD.

Mr. Spencer conducts a Sunday school regularly and will be pleased for all the children in the district to attend.

In future the motto of the Millwood day school is going to be "Let Well Alone," much to the satisfaction of the parents in the district.

Rev. Mr. Richardson preached his first sermon here on Sunday afternoon much to the satisfaction of his hearers. He is quiet, thoughtful and earnest and will be a great help to Mr. Sudder and us all.

Teams are thick as gophers at Millwood and Mr. Webster's jolly miller is running a roaring business—that is Mr. Webster is doing the business and the teams are roaring. The mill is running full power and time and the bridge is greatly appreciated.

SHELLMOUTH.

Sheep washing last Saturday—great fun for the boys. Colts braided the day before—more fun.

Mr. Denmark was offered $25 a hundred for his steers live weight by Mr. T. They are good ones.

Mr. H. Albright has imported a thoroughbred Ayrshire bull from Ontario with a very good prize ring record.

Mr. Lenton, of the Bellevue dairy farm, started his cheese making on the 1st of June, and he is making about thirty pounds a day.

There is good fishing in the Assiniboine. The small boys catch the frogs and the big boys catch the fish—Pike, Pickerel and Golyedes.

Mr. Venning's sale came off on the 14th as advertised and realized $1,850. Seven thoroughbreds realized an average of $88 each. The highest, a roan cow by Barrester with a heifer calf at foot, sold to Henry Smith for $100, the highest price realized. A two year old bull "His Majesty" by the herd bull "Major," sold to James McCallum for $82.50, and two year old bulls bought $50 each from James Black and Henry McNicholl. 57 were sold together without the calves. The two year old steers realized $31. The attendance was good and the lunch was excellent.

BINSCARTH.

Mosquitoes are very plentiful and vicious.

Mr. Hicks, of the Barnardo Home, is starting a dairy farm.

Mr. Smithson has given up the New Brunswick and is staying at the Royal Hotel.

Most of the farmers hereabouts finished seed last week. Crops are looking as well as could be wished.

The Church of England have arranged to hold service in the Presbyterian church here on Sunday afternoons.

Mr. G. L. Smillie, formerly of the Birsay Farm, paid a flying visit this week and has returned to Winnipeg.

Mr. Williams had the misfortune to scald himself severely while engaged in cooking, and is laid up for some weeks.

The annual horse races are to come off on the 21st inst. There are numerous entries and a good turn out is expected.

WINNIPEG.

A large number of provincial merchants were in Winnipeg recently and gave some substantial orders to our local wholesale houses, it is understood getting good value for their money.

Rev. Alex. Grant, of the First Baptist church, Winnipeg, has gone on a business trip to Galt, Ont. He will be absent about ten days. Rev. Mr. Cross will occupy the pulpit in the church during his absence.

The first pneumatic tired sulky brought into Winnipeg is at present on exhibition at Ross & Maw's show rooms in Princess street. The vehicle, after being accustomed to the ordinary sulky for so long, presents a somewhat peculiar appearance. It has been purchased by Pat O'Connor, who expects to beat previous records with it.

Dr. Irwin M. D., and master of surgery of the University of Durham, Eng., has entered into a professional partnership with Dr. Pennefather of Winnipeg. Dr. Irwin has returned to England to escort his wife to this country, and expects to return immediately to permanently reside here. This speaks well for what outsiders think of the prospects of our bull's eye city.

The annual competition of the public school children for the beautiful flag presented by His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, will take place on the Hudson Bay flats on the 30th inst., the last day before the long vacation begins. Several companies of the school children are actively at work drilling for the coveted prize. The parents of the children are to procure the services of a band for the occasion.

The camping out season has arrived and to meet the desires of Winnipeggers who are anxious to escape the worries and heat of life in the city, the C. P. R. is putting on a semi-weekly train to Rat Portage, which will leave the city at two o'clock in the afternoon on Wednesdays and Saturdays and a special train will leave Rat Portage every Monday morning for nine weeks. Campers tickets will be placed at the same figures as last year and with the additional train facilities Rat Portage promises to be more popular than ever this year with Winnipeggers.

W. S. Piper, of Fort William, Ont., is seeking divorce from his wife, now at Seattle, Washington, on the grounds of adultery. This is the third notice of the kind for next session.

THE LITTLE TYRANT.

HOW A FOOLISH MOTHER SPOILED HER SON.

Cody Slave to a Young Bully—Training Up a Child in a Way He Should Not Go. The Lad Who Was Interviewed in the Cellar.

(Copyright, 1883, by American Press Association.)

HINKING of how some wise persons bring up their children, I am reminded of an evening that I spent years ago in the family of the capable and popular editor of one of the most sturdily independent sheets in the country. I had long known and respected him, but this was my first visit to his family—his wife and two children. The elder child was a girl about 7 years old, who had early been taught by her mother that her position in the household was secondary to her brother's, this being the faith of many foolish mothers. The boy, a tyrant by nature and sufferance, was about 5 years old and evidently managed the house. I had been invited in an old fashioned, cordial way to "take tea and spend the evening," and I accordingly appeared at the hour named.

The children, with a group of others, were playing on the sidewalk before the house, which was on a quiet street infrequent by business vehicles. I saw at once that my friend's little girl was one of those unhappy children, the "little mothers" who, although scarcely more than babies themselves, are burdened and worried with the care of others still younger long before their time. This girl was so harassed by her brother's unmercifulness and stubborn, selfish, domineering ways toward the other children, whom he abused right and left, that she could not stop to greet me at all, being continually reminded by her mother from a window.

"Look out for Petty, Ellen!"

"See to your brother, Ellen!"

"Who is worrying Petty, Ellen?"

"Have any of you hurt Petty, Ellen?"

"Now you are neglecting your brother, Ellen!"

"I hear Petty crying again, Ellen, I shall call you into the house!"

"If you don't take better care of your brother, Ellen, I shall not let you go out of doors again for a week!"

And so on and on until the poor child had not a moment left for her own play, but was simply a body slave to the young bully. Finally he was said to be tired and was brought bawling into the house, and I supposed that then the poor, patient little sister would have her turn at play; but, no, the tyrant did not want her to go out unless he could go, too, and so she must sit sorrowfully in the house while her mates went away disappointed just at the pleasantest half hour of the day.

After tea, at which the youngster reigned with a rod of iron, interrupted only by a few mild protests from his father, who objected deferentially to his plan (and evident habit) of pre-empting the sugar bowl and putting his hand in the strawberry dish, the girl was hustled off to bed, as the boy was tired of her and now proposed to monopolize his mother. The girl departed with a tired little sigh that spoke volumes; but, alast! the boy had not the least notion of retiring, nor was there the least move made toward it excepting a tentative suggestion from his father that it would be pleasant to be able to have a little conversation with the visitor. This suggestion was at once thrown down by his son, who busied himself in alternately "riding a cock horse" on his father's foot, rolling on the floor and screaming when the cock horse was too tired to go any longer and pounding his mother in the face when she tried to remove his noisy shoes.

Of course all thought of talk was out of the question. Nothing was possible excepting to sit and watch the child's antics and hear his outrageous noise. Even this would have seemed pleasant later on, after he announced his intention to build a train of cars. First he claimed the sofa and all the spare chairs. Then he compelled his mother to rise and yield her seat. Then he laid siege to his father's chair, which surrendered, after some well bred grumbling from the occupant, who provoked a series of discordant yells from his offspring by suggesting, with the acumen that had made his reputation as the editor of a far-sighted and judicious daily, that perhaps the visitors had had enough of Petty. Petty comitted this view with firmness and success. He not only refused to budge, but he made cruel reprisal on the innocent cause of the suggestion by once seizing the leg of her chair and emptying her out of it in order to utilize it in finishing his railroad train.

Bevelled edged cards serve for the measures and are ornamented with gilded ropes and pulleys made of button holes posed together and gilded and cleverly painted in water colors in designs of ships, crabs, lobsters, strings of fish, sea gulls or a tar's sailor bonnet. They are very lovely. If retained as a souvenir by each favored guest, they may prove a fresh inspiration to the memory of the mermaid hostess with silver banded yellow locks and greenish gown who created so bewitching a coral dell from her king's treasures.

The only attempt at an apology for the performance was the mild remark that the boy "would really make so much more noise if he were crossed."

That boy was a dozen years old before I again ventured into his father's house. I own that I had always felt a lively curiosity as to how he would grow up. My curiosity was satisfied before I left the house. True, he no longer turned me out of my chair, and his sister sometimes got a few minutes to herself—when she was not hunting for his hat, picking up his tossed about garments or helping him about his lesson. His mother, as usual, had gained no favor from him by her wise indulgence. When she asked him to split some kindlings, he flatly refused. So she complained to his father, who at once interviewed the young man in the cellar.

"How is it?" asked the parent, "that you refuse to obey your mother and do not prepare the kindlings when she bids you?"

"The house is yours," replied this acute reasoner and dutiful son, "and the kindlings are yours, not mine. I think it's your business to do your own work for your own house."

At last the worm turned. I am inclined to think he turned the boy over by his knee from the sounds which followed, and I am free to say that I enjoyed that trouncing as heartily as I ever enjoyed anything with which I had nothing whatever to do.

That boy grew up a sullen, selfish, unruly youth, dreaded by his juniors in school and disliked by the neighbors, the bully and tyrant of his sister, the marvel and aversion of his father's friends, who supposed the son of such a man would be a gentleman. But by the light of his bringing up it was very wonder.

Petroleum Wells in Burmah.

In British Burmah it appears that there are now 602 petroleum wells, an increase of 92 since 1888, but there are distinct signs of exhaustion. The fact that the aggregate production of the richer wells has fallen off, while that of the poorer ones has increased, although many new wells have been opened, is regarded as the surest indication of the approaching decline in the industry. The drilled wells worked by the Burmah Oil Company and the Burmah Oil Syndicate have given very satisfactory results. In 1880 the total out-turn amounted to over 3,670,000 barrels, and in 1889 and 1890 has not been maintained during the past two years. The history of the industry shows that the production of the oil field steadily increased from the beginning of the century until about 1873, when it began to decline, rising again in 1885, and coming finally to a standstill in 1891.—N.Y. may be purchased in sufficient width for 60 cents, and it is easily silvered with a mixture of silver powder laid on with a brush. A large glass fish globe is next to be decorated with seaweed and coral, painted in oil, tied about the top with broad, glistening green satin ribbon and filled with goldfish, selected for their bright coats. This serves for the centerpiece. About it may be placed a ring of gilded oyster shells, incrusted with Roman pearls. A little paste fastens these to the shells. Wreathed about these should be made of bright red coral and dull green seaweed.

Silver or crystal candleabra may be placed at either end of the sumptuous board and fitted with green candles surmounted by tiny green grape paper shades. These set firmly on silver supports and may be silvered at the edges and spangled with tiny silver stars, which will be all aglow in the candle light. Tall crystal vases filled with artificial water lilies may have willow laces tied in and out and similar added to trail down about the slender stem. Toy canoes and delft shells, gilded or silvered, should hold bonbons and sweets, while gilt dragons and exquisite Italian dishes representing mermaids are appropriate if easily. Oyster and fish sets, fish napkins, doilies worked in seaweed, are always a part of household store. For baked fish there is a long dish made in Italiane ware in exact imitation of a monster fish. This incases the fish, keeping it hot until the moment of serving.

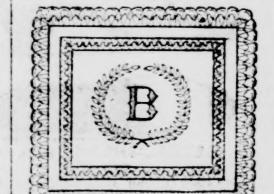

Bevelled edged cards serve for the measures and are ornamented with gilded ropes and pulleys made of button holes posed together and gilded and cleverly painted in water colors in designs of ships, crabs, lobsters, strings of fish, sea gulls or a tar's sailor bonnet. They are very lovely.

The pillow sham is made of fine white linen and heavy lace. The middle has an initial or monogram, with an ornamental border or garland worked in outline in pink, blue or red washing silk to match the color over which the shams are to be used. This embroidered middle is surrounded by a band of wide insertion, and this again by a band of the plain linen, which may have a narrow running pattern embroidered on it in the silk if it is desired. The sham is finished by lace sewed plainly around the edge except at the corners, where it is fulled a little to keep it from drawing.
